The Bolds Go Wild

Author: Julian Clary Format: Hardback Release Date: 07/03/2019 Year Groups: Key Stage 1, Key Stage 2

They may be a family of hyenas, but if we were all like the Bolds the world would be a much better place. In case you don't know, the Bolds live disguised as humans in Teddington. Their two children attend the local primary, and both parents work: Mr Bold writes cracker jokes, Mrs Bold designs extravagant hats. In this story, Mr Bold's mother arrives from Africa for a visit, and struggles rather with her son's new lifestyle choice. It looks like the family will be exposed, but the story takes a different turn, and once again the Bolds come to the aid of someone who needs their help. The story is deliciously bonkers, the illustrations just as witty and full of quirky detail, and the Bolds' live-and-let-live philosophy is a breath of fresh air in our quarrelsome times. If you want everyone to go to sleep smiling and happy, make this your bedtime reading.

A Julia Eccleshare Pick of the Month March 2018 | Interest Age 5-8 | We Are Not Frogs is a joyful exploration of frog, toad and human nature! Toads are not at all like frogs. The frogs have set up a long-jump competition which the toads go along with, even though they know the frogs will win - anything for a quiet life. The game is interrupted by the arrival first of a dog, then a couple of children, who have a lot to learn about toads. Readers will stay one jump ahead of the protagonists throughout, and it's a fun and very satisfying story. Sam Usher's lively illustrations reveal just as much about the characters - amphibian and human - as the text, and feature a counting game too.

The Usborne Official Astronaut's Handbook

Author: Louie Stowell Format: Paperback Release Date: 06/01/2015 Year Groups: Key Stage 1, Key Stage 2, Key Stage 3

One of our Books of the Year 2015 Cartoon-like illustrations fill this book which is packed with information about all things to do with space from machinery to suits to simple explanations of physics. Tricia Adams This book, with a Foreword by Tim Peake who in December 2015 became the first British astronaut to go to the International Space station, should go to the top of any must-have list for young children interested in space travel. It's packed with fascinating information on everything from what to study to help you become an astronaut, to the special training astronauts undergo, rocket science and how shuttles get into space, and what it's like to live on the International Space Station. Of course it explains how astronauts go to the loo, but the sections on what happens to human stomachs in space is just as icky and interesting! The information is very well presented, and despite the conversational tone there's no talking down. After all, the children reading this book could become fully fledged astronauts in the 2030s. Inspiring stuff!
